Ray Jordan has once again had his work cut out for him culling more than 600 entries in his annual red wine tasting, to come up with his definitive short list for winter. He had this to say about what he looks for in choosing the best:

'Primarily it is about balance between all the components that make a wine enjoyable to drink. The fruit, the oak, the acid and the tannins should all be working harmoniously towards producing a wine that smells good, tastes good, and feels good in the mouth.'

And he had this to say about the 2004 Calamus Red:

Lots of delicious appealing goodies in here with sweet ripe fruit and lovely mouth-filling texture. Fruit-dominant early drinking wine with some character.
